

The Role of Students in Science and Law

On March 3, the regular meeting of the "Q & Tar" research club of the Faculty of Law and History at Shymkent University took place. The topic of the meeting was "The Role of Students in Science and Law," and the importance of student involvement in research and legal studies was discussed.

Students from groups Tr-123 and Tr-223 participated in the event, presented their research papers, and exchanged views on current issues in legal studies. The meeting included a broad discussion of developing student research, deepening legal knowledge, and enhancing the role of science in future professional activities.

During the meeting, participants emphasized the importance of research and stated that students' active participation in research projects and research papers provides an excellent opportunity for their professional development.

Such meetings of the research club are an important platform for developing students' research skills, enhancing their legal culture, and fostering their interest in science.
